Following a quick setup operation, you are welcomed by the main app window. If you encounter any startup errors, check your PC for .NET Framework and turn on this Windows built-in feature since BitRecover MBOX to PDF Wizard cannot work properly without it. The wizard has clear instructions displayed, inviting you to select the source MBOX files or a folder containing many MBOX items you want to convert in bulk. All mailbox types are supported by the email conversion tool. Set the file naming rules and make the PDFs black and white. The file naming options take into account the email header information. For example, you can ask the utility to use the subject and date, or the date, sender and subject. Another option is to exclude header details and simply increment the file names automatically. Before starting the conversion, it's also possible to enable black and white mode if you want to create PDF files that cannot be searched through. Once you hit the "Convert" button, you can tell the application where you want to save the new PDF files. The PDFs are neatly organized after conversion. During the conversion job, you can view the name of each file currently being processed. A message pops up once the task is over, informing you that all files were converted successfully and noting the destination folder. Worth noting is that a new folder is automatically created in the output you previously specified, whose name contains the date and time of the operation. Also, each email from a mailbox is converted into one PDF file, and the new files are organized in different subfolders that have the name of the original MBOX files. Fast and easy-to-use MBOX-to-PDF converter. Taking everything into account, BitRecover MBOX to PDF Wizard offers a simple solution for turning MBOX files into PDF documents in bulk.
