Email is an integral part of daily life for most people, but sometimes happens to lose the most important contents of these messages accidentally. To fix this problem, a user-friendly and efficient application will be able to make a considerable difference. As the name implies, the application is built for back-up purposes and its functionality can be fairly described by the variety of features that it includes. Users will be required to sign-in with their Gmail credentials, and the tool will allow for the possibility of adding a filter for excluding unwanted content, in order to make certain that the exported results contain only the contents that a user wishes to back-up. The exported contents will be able to be renamed, and its attachments will also be supported for both backing-up and exporting. A dedicated mode will also allow users to choose the format that the email messages are converted to. Last but not least, the application also allows for storing the backups to local or remote server, and this mode can be configured to run in the background whenever the application is running. When the users need them, they will simply need to launch the application again and set up the backup data.
