So we have moved past the point of needing to decide which players are going to fill the last five spots in the bullpen. That leaves us with deciding which relievers to keep and which to cut. I think its best for the Braves to keep as many relievers as possible. I think that in this particular group, there is one clear weak spot that can be exploited. For a full breakdown of all the bullpen notes and predictions from the first 25 picks, including my picks for who should be picked first, second, third and the last five rounds, be sure to read the rest of the bullpen coverage. The team will want to keep as many relievers as possible. They may opt to move a reliever to make room for one of the undrafted free agents, like Sakeeda Thames or Nick Traverse. If there is a current closer that they think could be better and are willing to be patient with, then that could be an option. There is also a chance that we could see Atlanta make an investment in a starting pitcher. There is a chance, that with the abundance of players already signed, that we could see
