Q: MySQL: How to get the most recent entry per id I'm trying to get the most recent entry per id. I have a table called orders and inside it have an order_id field. The orders have a start_time and end_time. I want to output a list of all the newest orders ever recorded. So the results would be sorted by time. So if an order has been placed 2 times, and the end_time of the 2nd order is later than that of the first one, it would have a higher value than the first one. Thanks in advance.

A: `SELECT * FROM (SELECT * FROM Orders ORDER BY `order_id`, `start_time` DESC) as AA LIMIT 1`

Thursday, June 4, 2009 All the cash makes me cry One of the things that I have been dreading going into surgery is the possibility that my insurance will not allow me to recover costs for surgery. I am a nurse and an ER doctor. We are on the front lines (even though I am an internal medicine doctor) and this is what we deal with, day in and day out. From having my own insurance company ask if my child has any medical conditions and then denying the claim for the ER visit for a head laceration with a possible brain bleed, to paying out of pocket for the ER visit and then having the insurance company give me a reimbursement check after the bill is in the thousands. We are squeezed. My husband and I made the decision to go off our insurance so we would not have to deal with more medical bills and financial stress. Then we have this other stress to deal with, the possibility of not being able to recover costs for my surgery. Unfortunately
