The Eraser Tool The eraser tool is one of the most powerful tools in Photoshop. You can use it to select certain regions of an image, or easily erase all the unnecessary areas. When drawing with the eraser tool, it will leave a 'rubber' trail behind. With this trail, you can draw a perfect outline. How to use the Eraser Tool Step 1: Select the Brush Tool (B) Step 2: Switch to the Eraser Tool (E) Step 3: Press and hold the Shift key and click the Object you want to erase. You will see a 'rubber' trail start to appear around the selected object. Step 4: Double-click on a part of the object or you can hold the Shift key and press the + key. Q: Is polynomial approximation of real numbers with integer coefficients is isomorphic to polynomials with rational coefficients? Or in other words, if $f:\mathbb{R}\to\mathbb{R}$ is continuous, and $g:\mathbb{Z}\to\mathbb{Z}$ is the function mapping $x \mapsto x$, is it true that f can be approximated by polynomials with integer coefficients in the same way that polynomials with rational coefficients can be approximated by real numbers? A: I think the best way to phrase what you're asking is to ask if there is a full system of continuous functions from $\Bbb R$ to $\Bbb Z$. The answer is obviously no. For instance, the function $f(x)=x+1$ is continuous, but its image is $\{0\}$. That said, yes, there is a subgroup of $\operatorname{Map}(\Bbb R, \Bbb Z)$ with the same property as the continuous functions. It's the set of all functions f such that $f(x)=f(x-n)$ whenever $x-n \in \Bbb Z$, i.e., the maps $f:\Bbb R \to \Bbb Z$ which are homomorphic images of polynomials from $\Bbb R$ to $\Bbb R$. This is called the subgroup of homomorphic images of polynomials with integer coefficients. Applicability of anti-CD22 mAb-bound small particle array in treating leukemia and lymphoma. The present study is a preclinical investigation about the efficacy of drug conjugated anti-CD22 phage-displayed antibody (ADC) in treating leukemia and lymphoma. In this study, the anti-CD22 monoclonal antibodies (mAbs) bearing non-immunotoxic payloads (ADCs) were screened from a combinatorial phage-displayed antibody library against the anti-CD22 mAb, 5C6. The CD22-expressing cells KB-3C5 cell and murine lymphoma model was used in this study, and ADCs were effectively delivered into cells and malignant cells by their phagocytosis. The tumor-free mice were observed by screening the ADC-treated

Editor's Note: This story includes graphic content. Before the failed coup in Turkey, supporters of the movement to overthrow President Recep Tayyip Erdogan had been harboring high hopes that his overthrow would be completed and that a new era would be ushered in. Since the coup attempt, the government has taken control of all major television and radio stations, closed the country's border with Syria, restricted online access, suspended non-government, press and human rights organizations, and arrested hundreds of teachers, journalists, academics and activists. However, one of the darkest days for the country and its people came with the deadly Ankara and Istanbul bombings on Oct. 10. The recent series of bombings have left 17 people dead, and 286 injured in what the government has called terrorist attacks. At least 47 people have been arrested in connection to the bombings. A week later, on Oct. 17, two bombs exploded at the entrance of two mosques in Suruc, which borders Syria. Thirty-one people were killed in the attack. The country is in the crosshairs of ethnic, religious and political differences, and Turkey has been on edge for more than a year with numerous terrorist attacks. Last December, 51 people were killed in a bombing in Istanbul's Istiklal Street. The government blamed the attack on Islamic State. With the failed coup, peace hopes are gone. Now, it seems everyone is preparing for another attack. What's the solution? Experts say one possible solution is for Erdogan and his allies to embrace the country's army, which has been supporting the movement against him since the coup. "A different military force needs to be created because the military is not the same as the previous force," says Mahmut Kamil Saydam, a professor at the Middle East Technical University in Ankara. "It is possible to dissolve the current military by the new force." Oguz Kucuk, a researcher at the IAM International, an Istanbul-based institute focusing on global security and Turkish politics, says that the new leader needs to find ways of incorporating the military and implementing policy to quell tensions, such as a regular check on the loyalty of soldiers. "An alternative to the limited military solutions put forward by those who have tried to discredit the coup bid is to include the entire military and legal establishment, including civil servants, academics, teachers, and journalists,
