Disputes regarding patent troll patent portfolios have been ongoing for quite a while, particularly with regards to On Demand Web Hosting, a company known for its high-quality web hosting services. The issue was resolved when the parties involved came to an agreement regarding the matter, stating that On Demand Web Hosting agreed to a lower royalty to run its services on Black Lotus, a Canadian company. In case you are wondering, Black Lotus is a web hosting company which is known for its business practices that include the practice of filing patents related to methods of providing online services. The company has been known for its high-quality website hosting services and its practices which include filing for patents. Thus, in the past it has been settled that individuals and organizations that provide their services online, including web hosting, can indeed be subject to lawsuits resulting from such activities. While On Demand and Black Lotus have come to an agreement regarding a reduced royalty rate of 5.9 per cent for Web Hosting, On Demand has agreed to a net annual royalty payment of $150,000. This settlement will eventually benefit the students that are using On Demand Web Hosting, because it is going to reduce the amount that will be deducted out of a student's student loan, according to Brian Anselmo, On Demand's senior vice president of technology and customer support. Thus, if you are in such a position you may wish to consider searching for a web hosting service that is willing to settle such issues. It's a question that is becoming increasingly relevant as the market for enterprise and consumer smartphone sales are in decline. Revenue generated by RIM in the quarter declined, year-over-year, but the company is selling more phones at a loss, which has its own effect on the company. We've had plenty of discussion about the purchase of BlackBerry by a Chinese company, and the question on everyone's mind is whether the company has a bright future. It does, to some degree. The biggest question is whether BlackBerry will be able to maintain its position in the smartphone market, when their competitive position is strong, but the market for small smartphones is weakening. What is interesting about RIM is that they have continued to sell phones, even when the market has shrunk. And the company is showing signs of improving: in the third quarter of 2012 RIM sold 47.5 million phones, a strong increase of 5 percent over the prior year. Q2 2013 marked the strongest quarterly selling quarter of the company since Q1 2010, but the company needs a boost. RIM's tablet sales are down, as users move away from the BlackBerry PlayBook. Although RIM has the PlayBook, and continues to sell the tablet hardware, the company's ability to sell new hardware is clearly faltering. With the BlackBerry PlayBook, the company tried to create a new product, one that would establish itself within a market that is clearly becoming smaller. The decision to try to create a tablet platform that would eclipse the iPad seems to have been ill-advised: sales of the tablet, while not terrible, are not what they had hoped for. In Q2 2013, RIM sold 8.8 million PlayBooks, down from the 17.4 million it sold the year before. While the device is on its way out, RIM is also trying to figure out how to make more money with the older phone that is not going away. The BES phone platform is running pretty well. The BES 10.0 release contained a few bugs and the company is already preparing for the
