In the most recent installment of ESPN Cleveland's "The C2 Show," Collins looked back to a year ago, when the Browns wanted to wait to see what the rookie was capable of doing on the field before signing a long-term deal. However, the Browns never signed the player, and instead, the rookie will be making $105,636 in 2016 as a backup to Carlos Hyde. What happens to Alex Collins? "It was tough, you know, that was one of the only teams I talked to and the talks never even got to that point," Collins said. "So, yeah, I'm glad to be in a better situation right now"
