* Adobe Photoshop CS6 Intensive by Janet Dahle. See ` * Photoshop 101: Photoshop's New Features by Toma Shirai. See ` ## Organize Your Images Many photographers don't plan for disasters when they head out to shoot, so chances are that they don't print or copy off their best images. They save these digital copies only as digital images that are saved in their camera's memory or on a computer's hard drive. Over time, that collection can grow very large and your best images can easily get lost if you don't have any method to store and quickly access them. You should use some type of storage device, such as your camera's memory card or an external hard drive, to keep track of your images and to back up your photos to prevent them from being lost if a disaster happens, such as a fire, flood, or theft. You can also use the cloud as a backup resource because it is usually an Internet-based network and thus is accessible anywhere on the Internet (see Chapter 19). You can use Photoshop to organize your images and create a folder hierarchy to keep them organized so that you can find them easily. You can use this same organization system as a method to name your images that you will later use when you create JPEGs or any other image that you will place in this folder. Also use this method to sort your files. Later you can back up your image collection by copying the folder that has all of your images into your cloud storage drive. * Using Photoshop Layers to Organize Your Photos, by John Roberts, is available in the Missing CD page at `www.missingmanuals.com/cds`. * Organize Your Photos in Photoshop by Dick Binder is available in the Missing CD page at `www.missingmanuals.com/cds`. * Photoshop CS6: Organize and Manage Your Photos by Berto Sahu is a Missing CD on `www.amazon.com`. * Organizing and Naming Your Digital Photos by Janet Dahle is available in the Missing CD page at `www.missingmanuals.com/cds`. * Organizing Photoshop Files by Wendy Taylor is available in the Missing CD page at `www.missingmanuals.com/cds`. * Organize Your Photos by

The Dad A little over 4 years ago, my wife and I started trying to have children. As I said before, we both had issues with conceiving. We were seeing fertility doctors and taking all of the steps that people with fertility problems should. What we didn't know at the time was that my wife had undetected endometriosis and that she was also diabetic. From week three to week 14, it was pretty much all show and no go. Eventually, we decided to give it some time and try other avenues to get the "go" signs of conception. At that point, I should also mention that my wife was taking birth control pills to help regulate her periods. Finally, in week 20, she did have the "go" signs. From that point on, it was another six months before we saw our first ultrasound showing the heart beat. As we got closer to that day, we started getting nervous as all good parents do. Would they get big enough? Would they have the proper DNA? Would they be healthy? All of those thoughts and questions plagued us as time continued to roll. When we got to the moment to go in for that first ultrasound, I sat there and was nervous as hell. What if this ultrasound shows that we are pregnant or what if we see something else? It was quite a process for me as I started to prepare myself for all of the possible outcomes. My wife headed in with what we felt like were the worst fears possible. Her first ultrasound was fairly normal, seeing the heart beat and everything. The next two ultrasounds were normal as well. The third ultrasound was where it changed. They said that the baby was in the brain, but it was very large. Since I was not yet at my 20 week mark, I was not allowed to go in to see the baby so I took her word for it. I did at least go back over the ultrasound on my iPad and saw this picture: All of the crazy green lines on her stomach are actually a mixture of my wife's and the baby's lungs. My wife told me that she could not see any heart, but that's just because of the size of the baby's head. I could see them clearly. They also said that they did not see any brain, but I still saw it. I did not believe them at first, but now I am starting to understand how a baby can be alive

PRAGUE - The German government is considering a legal plea to avoid EU sanctions over the record refugee crisis because it has done its "very best" to help migrants, German Foreign Minister Heiko Maas said on Wednesday. The German foreign minister urged his European counterparts to work together to "renew efforts" to help the more than 1.3 million migrants and refugees who have fled wars and poverty in the Middle East and Africa to reach Europe in the past three years. The numbers have been unprecedented for a generation, and Europe has been powerless to halt the influx as several countries, including Germany, have allowed in large numbers of people from war-torn Syria alone. "It is my very best and most simple wish that Europe takes joint action to create the conditions for these people to return to their home countries as quickly as possible," Maas told a joint news conference with his Czech and French counterparts in Prague. He said Berlin was ready to shoulder a larger share of the burden. The European Union's executive Commission is in the process of drafting a list of possible sanctions including a ban on EU funds for Greece over its migration policy, and possible restrictions on migrants' access to the bloc's labour market. Germany has long resisted calls to seal its borders to those fleeing wars in Syria and elsewhere, arguing that the only option for Europe is to provide a safe transit zone. But the federal government's policy has been complicated by its migrant influx, with most refugees coming from war-torn nations such as Syria, Iraq and Afghanistan, and other migrants from outside the EU entering Germany. Berlin allowed in migrants from Syria last fall, long before the EU's top court ruled that member states should be obliged to help asylum seekers. And it has been unsure how to help those fleeing conflict in other EU states or countries of origin. "We know how difficult the solution is. We know that many countries like Germany face unique challenges. But we also know that we can successfully address these challenges," Maas said. "Because we have done all we can for the past three years and this is how we handle migration." Maas, a Social Democrat, acknowledged that Germany was in a no-win situation with its open border policy, adding: "But we hope in the end that this will be possible." The European Commission said in a statement on Tuesday that it was considering a range of sanctions because of delays in Greece's reception of migrants
