Your body, a living part of the planet, is protected from harmful UV rays by the ozone layer in the Earth's stratosphere. Below it are the protective layers of the atmosphere, namely, the troposphere, stratosphere, mesosphere and thermosphere. In addition, the earth has an atmosphere filled with a gas called nitrogen. This in turn has layers, with the lowest being known as the surface or troposphere. At the surface, the atmosphere absorbs some of the UV rays. The protective ozone layer absorbs the remaining rays, allowing only wavelengths around 290-320nm to penetrate. When your body absorbs the ultraviolet rays, your cells will be damaged. The ozone layer protects the planet from ultraviolet radiation and is vital to life. However, its existence is limited in time. By the year 2050, the ozone layer will begin to fail. When this happens, the UV rays will begin to penetrate deep into the atmosphere. The damage caused by the UV rays are harmful to health, in particular the eyes and skin. Humans will have to wear sun glasses and use sunscreen, otherwise their skin will burn and they could get skin cancer. In addition, the eyes may be affected by cataracts, which are discolourations in the eye, and skin cancer. The ozone layer will also affect climate, through the greenhouse effect. The ozone layer is destroyed by chemicals and particles. The chemicals include sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons. The particles include aerosols, including those that come from the burning of fossil fuels. Ozone is destroyed by the interaction between solar radiation and oxygen and nitrogen. Ozone is an important component of the stratospheric ozone layer. When the ozone layer is destroyed, UV radiation can reach the surface of the Earth. UV radiation is one of the most damaging and harmful radiations to humans. The Sun emits a great deal of UV radiation and it is harmful. UV radiation is a form of electromagnetic radiation. It is invisible to the human eye. People who spend long periods of time in the sun or who use tanning beds should be aware of the harmful effects of the sun on their skin. The sun can damage their eyes as well, especially when the eyes
