At 471,000 square feet, it's twice the size of the old shopping center, and every bit as attractive. The outside is taken up by three tall (300-foot), very attractive residential towers punctuated by setbacks and light-drenched penthouses. The interior has been divided into nine blocks, each with its own identity and retail boutiques. Moreover, the architectural centerpiece of the retail and residential district is a major open space. Each block is a self-contained unit whose streets flow into a large, nicely landscaped courtyard. The courtyard is the heart of the project; it's what the project is about. The project's design, which was accomplished by Atlantic Pacific Architects of Bellevue, Wash., was originally developed by the owner of the project, Arsh Group, a private real estate company. At the time, it was known as Banks. Then, last year, the Arsh Group bought a
