What's New in the .IRC?

What does this mean? If you've ever had the urge to chat with someone while sitting on IRC all day, then you'd want to check out Logitech's nifty little client. It's been around for quite some time, but it's just gotten better and better in the latest version. Why should I try it? Most of the time, the people on IRC are just sitting there by themselves, not knowing that anyone else is even around. While they may not even realize it, they're chatting with a few hundred other people at any given time, whether you're looking at it or not. You don't have to be on the same server as them to talk to them, and there are actually some servers that will accept your messages if they get stuck in your queue. And don't worry, that queue is easy to get into! If you've ever wanted to be able to connect to IRC servers like ever, this is your chance to finally try. There's a Linux version of it as well, so you can chat on both platforms without a problem. Features: ⬛ SSL support ⬛ SSL inbuilt support ⬛ Transfers/Events/Raw/URL support ⬛ Notify/Ignore/Tree/Transfers/Browser/Files/Raw/Events/URL windows ⬛ Lots of features ⬛ Configurable on the fly ⬛ Support for any IRC Server ⬛ Easy to use interface ⬛ Supports multiple servers at a time ⬛ Supports SSL ⬛ Auto-reconnects and auto-joins ⬛ It's that easy ⬛ Supports lots of other features as well ⬛ Supports Linux and Windows ⬛ Lots of other features ⬛ Opacity/Transparency support ⬛ Logging ⬛ Custom fonts ⬛ Font size ⬛ Change of font color and everything in-between ⬛ Timer support ⬛ Transfers/URL support ⬛ New/Copy/Paste ⬛ Widget ⬛ Variables ⬛ Aliases ⬛ Notify window support ⬛ Supports MSC filetype (The MSG filetype) ⬛ Password protection ⬛ Windows Version ⬛ Unlimited downloads ⬛ Uses cookies for logging and keeping settings ⬛ Also offers a "faster version" with popups ⬛ Gets
