Dive into the depths of the mine and explore for a way out. Have fun playing! !mimetype:SteamTraderGame !tgaInfo300 !tgaLoaded !tgaGameTrading !tgaNoSteamTrader A: I tried a lot of modes, the only one that worked was Half-Life 2's Time Trial mode. I set up the game to give the player 5 seconds per second for each level. I got each one in around 30 minutes or less. I can't find the official information about this speedrun, but from what I remember, the trick is to save your game whenever you've completed a level, in the middle of the next level. For the record, I have Visual Studio 2017 installed. A: Time Trial is the only mode that is activated. No other mode (including All Levels) has any effect on a Speedrun, so I would assume if it did, Valve would have included a setting for it. A: I didn't manage to beat the final level with all weapons and get any additional time. I saved before each level and then I was able to run the next level in less than an hour. Q: tensorflow tensor-like container storage as a pb or a dict Let's suppose we have two tensor like containers, containing 100 and 1000 elements respectively. I would like to store in RAM the first tensor using a tensor-like container storing it as a protobuf and the second tensor using a tensor-like container storing it as a dict. Is there any tools to achieve this or I have to store the raw tensor into a file and after load it using the tf.load() method? A: You can use TensorFlow SavedModel format, where you serialize data as a pickle or JSON file. The TensorFlow SavedModel API Reference includes instructions to serialize and load data to memory. If you have a fixed amount of data you can also use Variable which stores data in memory, but the data is not serialized.
