Q: Speeding up server side processing in PHP I have a PHP page that gets data from a MySQL table and then gets inserted into a MySQL table. Both of the queries are taken from the field of the row to be inserted. The code works great and all, but it takes about 4 seconds to get the data into the second table. Is there a way to speed it up? It is an extremely high traffic page with only about 45 lines of code.

A: Do you have access to the server? There are a number of things you can do that would improve the speed of inserts without changing the performance of the page: Increase the sizes of the indexes on the tables. Shrink the tables. Store the data in a different table with less columns. Use a more efficient storage engine. Also look at using a scripting language like PHP rather than a server side language like PHP.
