Chinese. We performed a family-based association study of two recently identified bipolar disorder (BPD) candidate genes, GAB2 and GABRB3, in a Chinese population consisting of 229 probands with bipolar I disorder (BP-I) and 488 of their unaffected relatives. The results failed to show association between GAB2 or GABRB3 and BP-I. Thus, the results provided no support for any of the two GAB2 or GABRB3 associations to affect BP-I in the Chinese population.[Skin innervation in patients with skin-nerve diseases]. The skin innervation was investigated by immunohistochemical techniques using antibodies against proteins of the neurofibrillary tangle (NFT), against choline acetyltransferase (CHAT) and neuropeptides F (NPSF) and calcitonin-gene-related peptide (CGRP) in 15 patients with sensory control subjects. CHAT-like immunoreactivity (CHART) was present in fibres and neuron-like cells, but NPSF or CGRP did not show any appreciable differences between the investigated disease groups and the control group. No, or very few, ganglionic NFTs were found. Nerve fibres of nociceptive origin were found in the dermis
