Australia's 20-year-old war ace fought and died in a crash-landing in the Pacific, after he broke both ankles in a machine gun attack. Captain Bob Rainsford was already a legend in the Royal Australian Air Force when, after injuries suffered in a crash in 1942, he survived to become the first "Hero of the Skies" in military history. Now, his family have remembered him for the first time since his death 80 years ago, as a beautiful tribute. Captain Robert "Bob" Rainsford (pictured) was Australia's first military aviator and went on to be the highest scoring fighter pilot in the Pacific, with 23 confirmed kills. His wife, Jean, said yesterday her only child left an indelible mark in Australia's history. "Bob was a wonderful son, grandchild, brother, uncle and brother in law," she said in a statement released by the RAAF. "He was our only child and he always knew he was his parents' favourite, but we always knew he had other responsibilities as well." Captain Rainsford shot down the Japanese aircraft in 1942

A global form of the classical polarizability tensor is introduced. Differential coherently controlled vibrational spectroscopy probes the molecular electrostatic interaction between water molecules, allowing a distinction between the dipole, quadrupole, and higher-order interactions. Applying this technique to the nO stretching modes of liquid water, we demonstrate the existence of a negative contribution to the third-rank polarizability tensor that has never been reported before in the literature. It is proposed that the negative contribution arises from the H-bonded regions of water molecules in solution. Its magnitude is shown to be important for the stability of the individual water molecule, which indicates that it has a role to play in determining the solvent structure and thus the diffusion of solute molecules in solution. This finding does not rule out the possibility that the bulk properties of liquid water could be determined by the cooperative behavior of more than one molecule.Effect of smoking cessation on the development of mixed-type and type 2 non-Hodgkin's Lymphoma: Findings from the Consortium of Investigators of the Lymphomark study. A prospective cohort study was conducted to assess the effect of smoking cessation on the risk of non-Hodgkin's Lymphoma (NHL) in the first 3 years after quitting smoking. The study included 9294 men from the Consortium of Investigators of the Lymphomark study. The smoking history was assessed at baseline and updated during follow-up. Incidence of NHL increased with increasing level of smoking at baseline in a dose-response fashion, with an adjusted hazard ratio for current versus never-smokers of 1.3 (95% confidence interval [CI], 1.1-1.5) and 1.5 (95% CI, 1.1-2.0) among former smokers. The strength of the increased risk among former smokers appeared to be strongest for advanced-stage, mixed-type, and diffuse large B-cell NHL but not for type 2, transformed follicular, or
