As an example of my codes: String direc = "C:\Normal"; String[] filesArray = direc.split("\"); Hashtable ht = new Hashtable(); try { for (File file : Files.list(direc)) { String key = direc.substring(0, direc.length() - file.getName().length() + 1); String value = file.getPath().toString(); ht.put(key, value); System.out.println(ht.get(key)); } } catch (IOException e) { } Now I think the line is marked is where my problem is. When the filesArray is empty the ht is essentially a Hashtable that never gets passed or set so that it returns a null if I call anything from it. Please can someone enlighten me to what I'm doing wrong? A: String direc = "C:\Normal\"; String[] filesArray = direc.split("\");

Q: symfony2: how to use different module from different application i am using symfony2 for my project and i am also using multiple applications so i want to create module in one app and want to use that module in other app. A: I don't think that's a great idea, but, yes, you can do it. To do it, do two things. First, you need to run app/console module:create --yourapp app_module. In your app/config/config_dev.yml, you need to add a parametre that will be available in your app_dev.yml. (I'm not at my dev machine right now, so I can't point you to the place where you need to add this parametre, it's been a while since I needed to do this.) Second, in your.yml files, you need to reference the module where you've put the app_module. For exemple : app/config/config.yml doctrine: dbal: ... orm: default: entity_managers: default: mappings: AppBundle: type: annotation prefix: AppBundle\Entity dir: %kernel.project_dir%/src/AppBundle/Entity alias: AppBundle That's how
