Initial Live Team Lab Work Initial Live Team Lab work included creating visual images of the final motion capture data from 'FIFA 22 - Creation Lab' and analyzing data in real time. We met with the following three Designers and revealed their initial concept. There is a small chance that these concepts may evolve into the actual gameplay we see in FIFA 22. DAKMA (Lead Mapper): DAKMA (Lead Mapper) : We knew immediately that we wanted to create a digital, realistic-looking world, a world of motion and emotion, with a very clear and strong color. My idea was to introduce a real world which is inspired by places I'd lived in - Berlin and Los Angeles. The work of German artist Harald Moser, known for his world map of the future, was a big influence, as well as Irish artist Bridget Riley's series of colour paintings, in which objects have a hybrid reality in between a living and non-living world. GPE (Digital Assets Creator): GPE (Digital Assets Creator): Being a virtual producer, working on this project, I was very keen to create something very realistic and something that would feel natural. Motion is the key to create such emotion. I have always had a passion for motion capture and animation, and motion capture technologies is something I have a lot of passion for. I worked on testing out the whole motion capture suit and then spent a lot of time trying to understand which sections that need to be improved, which sections were added, or deleted. It is so difficult to create something that looks natural and believable at this kind of level. You need to create a believable model, a believable virtual environment, and you need to achieve a very high level of accuracy, but without looking too artificial. My favorite thing about these suits is that we are working with them for the first time. I'm looking forward to the day when we get feedback from the designers about the concept we have come up with. We'll let you know more details on this project as it develops. Livio (Lead Animator): Livio (Lead Animator): This is a game about football. My aim is to make the
