Gameplay has also been adjusted to make passing and shooting easier, introducing a new improved control system for passing and shooting and a more realistic “accurate touch” moment indicator. The new control system has been designed to provide more options for players, including forward, backward, sidestep, roll, dink and other controls. On the ball, players will lean more on their movement and have to make more difficult choices when in control, while also being more decisive and making more instinctive decisions. Other gameplay changes aim to make the in-game “Reading the game” on the pitch more believable. Players will now track the position of the ball better, have a better sense of how to approach a situation, and will more readily make the right choice without missing a chance to commit to a pass. The new “accurate touch” indicator provides a more realistic feel for the ball hitting the ground while in the player’s hands. Players can now make better decisions when in possession of the ball, making them more decisive and making intuitive choices. “Real football is more than just beautiful, it’s a heartbeat of improvisation where players and teams react to each other quickly and unexpectedly,” comments Greg Haertle, EA SPORTS Director of Gameplay. “It’s this heart and soul of football that we want to capture with FIFA 22 and the new ‘accurate touch’ indicator.” Realism, individual action and player reaction A player’s actions will now be more realistic, and the player will react more accurately to their environment and situations. Players will also be given the opportunity to make more on-the-ball decisions without missing out. To bring the action of football on pitch to life, the new control system for passing and shooting will be introduced in FIFA 22. Players can now lean more on their movement, and use sidestep, dink and other movement controls. On the ball, players will be able to track the position of the ball better, and will more readily make a decision with the ball under their feet. Players will also be able to see the specific components of a pass, and be able to react more quickly to the cues the pass gives off. FIFA 22 introduces a new “accurate touch” indicator. When a pass is made, the player will see how
