There are two modes included in the game: The Ultimate Team-style modes FIFA Ultimate Team and Pro Clubs, as well as the ePorts (EA's name for this mode, pronounced "ports"). What Are ePorts? ePorts is a concept that relates to FIFA Ultimate Team. The player begins with a starter squad of 18 players (which is denoted as a "3-star" squad) and then can fill their team with "ePlayer Cards" to boost squad quality. These cards include things like potential one-star, two-star, and three-star cards which are also comparable to the Ultimate Team card structure. The ePlayer card is tracked on the ePortal, which is a digital hub that contains player data, stats, news, and videos. The purpose of the ePortal is to place players inside a virtual world that players can interact with and have these virtual players act and react to the player's actions in the virtual world. The virtual world is placed inside a separate screen that allows players to have some free roam, though they will be prompted to use the Virtual Training Room in order to improve various attributes. Players earn cards from victories over rival players, online matches, online draft, and the attribute development of individual attributes. Players can also bet on cards with the in-game currency, Playerscoins (Collectible Items currency). The ePortal is a feature that separates ePorts from other modes in FIFA Ultimate Team. The concept is similar to the Universe mode in that one can start with a "star" player and then progress through the lower tiers of players (ePlayer cards). However, in ePorts, you don't have to play against other players in order to earn cards as players will play a series of online matches to earn the cards and progress through the developmental tiers. You can also assign players into different teams and create ePlayer cards for players in those teams. There is also a rule that some cards that enhance attributes will only be available for one particular team. How Does ePorts Work? The ePlayer cards are unlocked by progression in ePortals. In a nutshell, players are given cards in the ePortals based on their level of play. The levels for cards in each attribute are determined by play in the ePortals. FIFA Ultimate Team players receive the highest-level cards at the start of the
