The process of sending information over a channel, for example telephone or television. An information channel is a route that information travels along to reach its destination. Data Communication Definition. There are two types of information channels: Physical channels and logical channels. Physical channels are used to transmit information between computers and other devices. Examples of physical channels are telephone lines and electrical wiring. The channels used for data transfers may depend on the application and include wires, wireless networks, fiber optic networks, and circuit-switched and packet-switched networks. Logical channels are specialized forms of physical channels that use defined protocols to transfer information. Examples of logical channels are the Internet, email,
