Upon the release of End Night, one local newspaper declared the game as the game with the "most interesting title of the year." The release was done in cooperation with a company known as Scrapyard Records. Together they brought out a twelve-song EP titled The Dark Days to complement the Game's eight-song album. The songs on the EP were all performed by band members. The EP version of the Game re-titled itself The Game for the EP. On June 21, 2011, The Game released a cover of Van Halen's "Jump" to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the band's "Jump" music video. The physical video and The Game for the EP featured footage from the band's video in 2010. End Night and the Day After On July 20, 2011, The Game released their fourth studio album, End Night and the Day After. The album's lead single, "Fade Away", was released on September 6, 2011. The album was released via Century Media Records and Scrapyard Records, as well as featuring a DVD included with the album featuring the band's music videos from 1999-2003, a behind-the-scenes video, and a documentary on the band. On September 20, 2011, The Game toured with Seether and Blessthefall. The tour was in support of the release of End Night and the Day After. The End of Days On November 20, 2011, The Game released their fifth studio album, The End of Days. The album's lead single, "An Ode to the Forgotten," was released on December 8, 2011. Upon its release, it reached number 12 on the Billboard Rock Songs. At the conclusion of this Tour was in support of The End of Days. Doomsday On January 27, 2012, The Game released their sixth studio album, Doomsday. The album's lead single, "The Main Man," was released on February 21, 2012. "The Main Man" reached number 20 on the Billboard Rock Songs. Upon the conclusion

British intelligence services tracked the location of the Chelsea bomber's iPhone the night before the attack, it has been reported. Two days before he carried out the attack, the mobile was used to browse the British far-right community's usual website, The Daily Stormer. This would seem to be a significant clue that the attacker was deeply immersed in far-right propaganda and ideology. The theory, asserted by media website The Telegraph, is that the bomber may have used the mobile to receive a politically motivated far-right website. Then, it's thought, he sent out the attack remotely to his targets, either using radical right-wing WhatsApp groups or by going to classified chat forums to share his plans. The claim comes from sources inside the British security services. The Telegraph report comes in the wake of U.K. security services axing their special propaganda division Zello, which put out livestreams of far-right gang attacks on Muslims and minorities in the U.K. The attack itself was carried out by a lone wolf. The Mail reports that the attack was carried out with a home-made explosive device, and that the bomber was an animal rights activist who had spoken about wanting "to do some harm." While the British security services are conducting a major review of their work in the wake of the attack, media reports are increasing in their speculations about the government's role in the attack. Such reports look ahead to Theresa May's summer retirement as prime minister. Speculation has increased in recent days about the possibility that May's replacement will be Boris Johnson, the former London mayor who resigned in July. There has been speculation about Johnson's extreme right-wing views, and about his links to populist radical and white nationalist circles. The Telegraph reports that Johnson has regularly communicated through encrypted messaging app Wickr. Previous reports of the informant are difficult to verify and his identity is not

Aberrations in expression of MMPs, E-cadherin and  $\beta$ -catenin in the regional prostate of an adult rat urinary bladder carcinoma. The matrix metalloproteinases (MMPs) are responsible for extracellular matrix degradation and their role in tumor progression is well recognized. The present study investigated the expression and distribution of MMPs, E-cadherin and  $\beta$ -catenin in the urinary bladder and distal prostate of a tumor-prone rat strain (Golden Retriever(R) strain) which is predisposed to develop multifocal transitional cell tumors of the bladder. Transitional cell tumors were induced in males by in vivo treatment with N-butyl-N-(4-hydroxybutyl)-nitrosamine, a nitrosamine compound, and 4-aminobiphenyl, a polyaromatic amine, which is a carcinogen. After tumor appearance, the rats were anaesthetized and transurethral resection of the prostates was performed. The three-dimensional whole mount light-microscopic distribution pattern of MMP-1, MMP-2, MMP-3, MMP-7, MMP-9 and E-cadherin was studied in the urinary bladder region,

I will be keeping an eye on this i will sure be checking some more as soon as my Game gets out. Monthly Adventures An AU of netgen Xion lore. Canon Xion is the name of the game. Also, enjoy. Update sometime in the near future. *sees things* Chapter 3 Suspense "Xion?" The name called out to the younger mage as the older man came into the room, his hand extended to pull her towards him. Faced with such an offer, the young mage was reluctant to pass such an honor, even if it would lead her to continue her journey to find her true self. "Papa?" She questioned. "Yeah, it is. I need you to meet a friend of mine and only you can do this, because it will help us on our quest," he said, as if his very life depended on it. "Mom is working," she said. "She won't even know. Will be tomorrow morning." Her mind raced for a moment, considering the implications. "You really want me to do this?" She asked as she took his hand and looked him in the eye, seeing the true desire there to be a part of the true Xion that he truly was. "Xion will meet you." She glanced around the room and saw her grandfather's old trophies and she looked to him with a sad sigh and said "Alright, but if this is a big mistake, I won't blame you, but I will keep that in mind." "Trust me," he said and pointed with his finger. She followed it to look back, just in time to notice her own reflection over the sink and then she turned to see a hazy, frowning, dark-haired girl sitting in a chair looking to her. Staring at her. Looking up at her, with evil intent plainly on its face. "Hello, Xion, my old friend. It's been a long time," it said, chuckling. The black shadow took her hand in its own and began to draw her into the ritual. As she witnessed the sinking feeling, Xion felt a flood of emotion and rage wash over
