--A chat about pollution and philosophy by Stuart Elliott Much of my work as an environmental philosopher is concerned with civic education and with development of young people's environmental awareness. So I am delighted to be an endorser of Night Fly, a new blog ('Asleep in the Cosmos' is the title of the blog) about fossil fuel usage and our now overtly ugly, depleting and threatening modern world. I have had the privilege of publishing with them in a joint book of essays 'The capitalist solution: the pollution crisis and prospects for evolution'; and I am particularly pleased that they are sharing three pieces with us now. One concerns economic limits on growth, and another growth vs environment. The third topic is the perils of fracking in the US: "1. the book as it became overtaken by events over the summer of 2010. Two years in the future, it is clear that was part of the plan — all the more so because geologists said that 2014 could be a tipping point, with the beginning of a new geological epoch — the Anthropocene. Two days after the July 16 event, where the president of the US had to confess that global warming is real, something more alarming happened than the discovery of yet another toxic ‘stranded’ oil well: an ocean rift appeared off the west coast of Spain. This rift was quickly photographed by a NASA satellite that was performing routine scanning of the oceans from space. It appeared at the time that the latest working estimate of the sea floor between North Africa and Europe was being raised by as much as a kilometre. There is a calculation already made in the new geological epoch called the Holocene epoch — beginning about eleven thousand years ago, after the last ice age — which would extend until a catastrophic event raises sea levels. The effect would be that today’s coastal cities would be abandoned. And given today’s rates of carbon dioxide generation, carbon dioxide levels in the atmosphere and ocean would reach a critical ratio — determined by the carbon content of the atmosphere and the ocean — approximately 350 parts per million. We have already seen a couple of hundred parts per million in the atmosphere, and now, we have a new independent source. The new calculation, which typically is set out on

CALL OF DUTY: BLACK OPS 4 is the next great iteration of the Black Ops series' most popular multiplayer modes: Domination and Kill Confirmed. Domination Domination is our classic multiplayer mode, where a team of five players must complete a series of objectives, in order to secure a Point-of-Empowerment (POE) first. The first team to achieve the POE score a win, and points are awarded for each consecutive win up until someone on either team flips the POE and wins the match. However, if a team can grab the Power Generator it will grant a point to the opposing team, allowing them to flip the POE. Not only does this affect the current match, but it also tips the balance of the match to their favor, while also awarding the team they flipped the POE to a point. This means you could be up by a lot, or a lot down. Either way, one team will be down, and one team will be up. This is Domination. Kill Confirmed Kill Confirmed is a variant of the classic, 'Capture the Flag' match, where two teams are split into Attack and Defense teams, who must fight to capture and hold control of the Killzone in order to win the match. Everyone has a button for shooting, or as we call it, 'eliminating' opponents. The defender has an additional button to call in the nearest Support Mech, where you can call in a teammate with devastating firepower that can turn the tide of battle. Support Mechs are identical to the friendly 'Capture the Flag' defenses, so your team can easily bring a friend to defend against an overwhelming enemy force. Unlike Domination, where both teams play to flip the POE, in Kill

Confirmed, only the Defense team can flip the POE. It means the Defense team can play strategically for control of the map, while the Attack team plays to earn Kill Points, which can be awarded at any time during the match. If you manage to call in your Support Mech, it makes the kills on-screen feel that much more rewarding. No matter what style of play you prefer, there's room for multiple perspectives on the field. With all of the gameplay variety in Black Ops 4, Domination and Kill Confirmed are the perfect pair, opening up all sorts of new tactics and strategies. All the modes can be played with your friends in offline splitscreen, or with a group
