You can read to me this tutorial: http.The structure of major portal venous outflow in chickens: a low-field MR angiography study. This study aimed to describe the portal vein inflow into the liver in the chicken. Ten domestic chickens were studied with a 4.1 T magnet and a time-resolved three-dimensional fast spoiled gradient-recalled acquisition in the steady state sequence. Eight stations were defined along the portal vein. Blood signal intensity was measured in each station before the administration of gadolinium-based contrast agent. Signal-to-noise ratio (SNR) was calculated and plotted with respect to the location along the portal vein. Two-dimensional T2-weighted images were reconstructed from all stations, and signal intensity of the veins within a voxel was averaged to yield SNR maps. The relationship between SNR and vessel diameter was examined using linear regression analysis. Mean SNR value was 0.9 with a range of 0.2-1.3, corresponding to a vessel diameter of 0.2 to 2.3 mm. There was a positive correlation between SNR and vessel diameter ( $R^2 = 0.58$ ,  $P = 0.01$ ). Signal loss in the smaller diameter venous channels is probably caused by flow effects. Signal loss in the main hepatic veins was less pronounced, due to the relatively large flow rate through these vessels. Proteomic analysis of mitochondrial proteins from Arabidopsis thaliana identifies a high amount of
