What's new in Kill Him! Online Wars:

, Rise of Purity... I played the first chapter of Divinity: Original Sin 2 two months ago, and while I really love the game, it's far too early for my Final Thoughts on it. R-SoC, who has been playing it for slightly less than a month, thankfully gets to play a little bit more. He starts clicking around the interface that I so adored and often wished I had the time for, gooped up with all sorts of options for everything. Character Creation is a bit of an exercise in patience. It's set up so that you decide all sorts of things about the shape of your character as you create him, including the time it takes. Being the obsessive type (honestly, I found the bit in Divinity: More Than Just Combat that mixes character creation to be amazing and satisfying), I quickly made him a Halfling. Then a Dwarf. My impatience got the better of me and I created a few more characters, as I decided to experiment with the "Choose Ability" button. As I was quest-tapping along (with all of the party-forward options available), I also spawned up a race to see what that smelled like. After I got out of my dwarf (more or less accidentally before I even discovered the party-forward options) not much had happened, so I picked up a zephyr-spewing race called the Psyker. Within the next hour I had a group of four adventurers, and I was trying to figure out how to best design their character classes so that their characters would act like they did in my head. I was going to add in more, but have them not matter. This is another fun way in which Divinity: OS2 deviates from traditional role-play design games. How would they act in a way that nobody else was doing in your group? Sure, I played an elf, but there were no elves around, so it would be unusual. In this case, I decided that they would act as if they were all Ghouls. What? The group is not of Ghouls? That almost never happens. I changed them to be Inquisitor-Ghouls, so they would investigate and destroy evil. My PCs rolled their stats, and the characters were born. You're expected to know how to play a bunch of classes, and it's hard to find experience in dialogue trees. It can take a few hours to figure out how the items work and what variables

Unlike the Game which was originally intended as a mere proof-of-concept, this new iteration of the game is a fully fledged game with more in-game features and menu items. Not to mention, it is free! If you're interested in the original game, you can still get it here: If you're reading this, I'm sure you'll agree that Frontier should be a permanent home. I'm just saying, it's not a mod. It's an updated game. ;) This new game is my first game design under the name "Hackastronaut" (aka my first work as a game designer!) Features: A full game with various items, items that are locked behind certain conditions and hints and tips to help you along your way. Survival Mode. Train your skills and play a simple survival mode to test whether your skills are suitable for this game. New Menu Options. Have the option to skip menu items which are not interesting to you. Ability to restart a level. If you get lost in a stage and want to start over again, press the "R" key. No Game Over Screen, you can go back to the menu whenever you want! I plan to implement more in game features, but these things will take up a lot of time and I want to know that it is something people would enjoy. So please give me feedback to help me shape this game into the experience I want! Most items are locked behind certain conditions, for example, the Confusion Blurb must be enabled for the cannon to fire. Some hints and tips to help you out. What would you like to see here?
