But he was struggling with a burning desire for his wife, Jean. One night, in a chance, Donut borrowed from a friend a bag of pornographic magazines and drugs. It was a fatal mistake. The police questioned Donut, who initially denied the incriminating evidence found in his car. When he realized his wife and boys would be the same, he confessed. On March 3rd, the father of two was sentenced to 12 years in prison for the murder of Jean. "He killed a beautiful person, a woman who was loved. He was happy and thrilled with the fact that he was able to take all those things he loved and destroy them," Judge Joan McKinstry said. Donut's mother, a home health care provider, stood at the back of the courtroom and cried bitterly. She said that in order to avoid public view, she couldn't appear to speak for her son. But she did say, through a translator, that she and her family deeply regretted what happened to her son and that his life was ruined. "I hope that society will realize that she's just as human as
