The Czech Republic, a country of just 10 million people, is seeking support from a British think tank to help fight the spread of extremism in the country. A report produced by the Czech-British Foundation says that recent events in the country amount to “a shattering blow to the state of law and order and to our freedom”. It is urging the British government to support the Czech Republic’s efforts to “maximise the efficiency of law enforcement” to protect its citizens from extremists. It suggests that the British government should provide training and support to the Czech authorities as well as help in the coordination of existing networks and programmes. In a statement, the Czech-British Foundation said: “In recent months, a series of violent terrorist acts, including bomb attacks, knife and gun attacks, have shaken our beloved Czech Republic.” “Over the past three months we have witnessed an explosion of extremist activities with demonstrations, attacks, and antigovernment actions. And we have seen the use of technology to spread ideological propaganda and fake news, all in a language understood by the youth.” The Czech report says that radicalisation by Islamic extremists poses a major threat to the Czech Republic and is receiving a wider response from the country’s authorities than any threat from “traditional extremist groups”. The report says that there are about 1,600 so-called “homegrown” Islamic extremists in the Czech Republic and about 700 of them are thought to be in the UK. The Czech report says that those who have travelled to fight with extremist groups in Syria and Iraq have returned home to “inject extremism into the Czech Muslim population”. It says that the outbreak of violence has been a “depressing development” for the country. The report says that the Czech Republic faces a particularly significant threat because of the country’s location and proximity to Western Europe. Fully four quarters of all the people detained in the Czech Republic in recent years for terrorism-related charges have been found to have links with Britons. The report says that there is no evidence that there are any Czech citizens at

Will someone please build quality affordable housing in that area or what I call the "Jacksonville Beach industrial park." It seems that every time I turn around, someone is demolishing affordable housing and putting up new expensive housing. I got news for you, NOBODY wants to live in the first hot spot off the beaches. I can't believe that someone would put up condos there to house "indigents". Those beautiful homes overlooking the beach, anyone want to live there? I sure as hell don't.Illinois' capital city is known for its lovable colloquialisms, like the famous expression, "Where's the beef?" But the city's geography and cultural heritage also set it apart. One of the most intriguing attributes is its successful balancing act between two urban centers: The Loop and the South Side. It's a place that often asks: What's right? And what's wrong? While some argue that it's the perfect blend of the best of the east and west, others would label it absurd. Can Chicago be whole? That sentence describes the role Chicago has played in our nation's history. According to historian John David Smith, author of The American West and Nationalism, the vision of a "New West" depicted a seemingly orderly progression of white settlers moving West. But unspeakable violence and bloodshed played an important role in uniting settlers. Much like most cities, Chicago's history as a regional and national center of economic and industrial power began with the 1833 purchase of the Illinois Territory and the 1833 sale of Ft. Dearborn in 1804 by the government of the U.S. Territory of Michigan. The sale of Ft. Dearborn, which was the first capital of Illinois, to the federal government was largely facilitated by President Thomas
