The Refuge was a place to repair people. It was a refuge, where beings of many different kinds could be fixed, so that they might be able to carry on with their own lives, the right way. Since the outside world had become a rather dark place, and the people needed repairs more and more every day, a place like this was a blessed thing. But this refuge was under a threat. On the outside world, the sky kept darkening, and the winds kept beating the planet harder and harder. It wouldn't last forever, but it sure seemed to be getting harder every day, until one day, it would be too late. Today, the air was still. This was the day the Refuge would be closed. Its time had come. On the way to the Refuge, he bumped into a young fellow. The young man was a walking cutout of ripped jeans and torn up tee-shirts, showing off his bruised and bloodied knees. His whole body was covered with battle wounds and his eyes were lost, looking through the void. He kept his mind on his knees as if they had a mind of their own, and nothing could be more wrong. "Let me see…"

He was a bit shocked to see the boy's knees; the skin of them were all torn and his muscles were so bruised and thin that they couldn't stand the tug of his knees. "Wait." The man went inside the shelter to get something to disinfect his wounds, leaving the boy outside. He thought he could have a few minutes of free time before he was done with his job. He left his bag, and decided to take a walk through the battered landscape, even though he didn't even know where he was heading to. There was something that he wanted to find. As he walked, the whole world was crashing into him. Where the trees used to be, were miles and miles of rolling hills. Once there was a family of three, a mother, a father and a boy. He stood under a tree. Their house was destroyed, its roofless walls crumbling away in the wind. The mother's body, covered in blood, was draped over a broken-down fence. There was nothing they could do, as their other son was dead too. All that
