vampiri.co.uk/manuale.htm A: I would recommend using strings to find the lines you are looking for, which you can do via python. You can just append lines in a list until you find what you are looking for. Using the example you gave: import re # First we open the file that contains the lines that we want with open(MYFILE, "r") as myfile: # Process the lines you want to find for line in myfile: # The line must be in this format: # {text} (is this a code?) # any number of space (the space is a new line) # any number of dots (dot = new line) line = re.findall(r'\{.(?:.|\s)\}', line) # Append the line to a list, if it is not code if len(line) > 0 and not re.match(r'^[a-zA-Z]*$', line[0]): lines.append(line) # Now go through the list and do what you need for line in lines: print(line) You can also specify other regular expressions to do what you need. You cook and eat, let the rest be in the hands of the chef :D 2 Comments Ana,I have had to remove most of them since they were to spicy for me. They are d0c515b9f4
