A new survey conducted by in-home care company Seacare shows that an overwhelming majority of Americans are concerned about the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on seniors and their ability to live independently, but there are certain misconceptions that many people are harboring. In the ongoing battle against COVID-19, Americans are forced to make difficult decisions about how they will keep their loved ones safe and healthy during the crisis. While many Americans are trying to be careful and cautious when it comes to their own health, it can sometimes be difficult to keep up with all of the latest government guidance and recommendations, so we wanted to give you some information to help you get ready for the next phase of the coronavirus outbreak.

As more and more Americans begin to slowly begin to reopen, it is important that they be clear about what they will need once they do. A full list of essential items will be released by the government once the quarantine phase is lifted. One of the biggest misconceptions that we've noticed is that many people think that essential items are the same for everyone and that it would be a good idea to stockpile everything. While it is good to have essentials on hand in case something goes wrong and you need to move quickly to keep your family safe, we want you to remember that it is important to carefully assess your own needs before stockpiling everything, especially if you plan on putting yourself back into the workforce once things begin to get back to normal. What is the difference between a public and private home? In general, each home has its own unique set of needs, and with two different systems and routines in place, it is important that your caretaker do their best to assess each situation in order to keep everyone safe. At home care (in a private home), the master bedroom and bathrooms will be the only rooms that are open to guests. Guests will only be
