Trump's Iraq War Policy: A Failure By Any Other Name In February 2019, President Trump announced his intentions to withdraw U.S. troops from Syria, a surprise decision widely regarded as the single most significant shift in U.S. foreign policy in the last few years. The president's chief complaint was that the fight against ISIS had been an unmitigated disaster – we can't even defeat ISIS, he said – and that U.S. soldiers had been embroiled in a conflict they shouldn't have been in. "We're doing a great job," he told CBS's Face the Nation in February. "We have beaten ISIS. They're all gone, they're mostly gone." AD AD The president was wrong, and the administration was right to withdraw, but it is only by taking stock of the Trump presidency that we can really understand why this war has been lost. Trump's decision to abandon Syria, which was reached with the cooperation of Russia and Turkey, speaks volumes about the administration's priorities. The president is fickle, erratic, and unstable, and his gut decision to withdraw was swayed by what he felt was a popular desire to bring American soldiers home. But behind Trump's erratic policy shifts lies an extraordinarily consistent approach to the use of force – since he took office, he has consistently, year after year, moved the country closer to the brink. In the case of Syria, he lied to his cabinet about his intentions, with Defense Secretary Jim Mattis and Secretary of State Rex Tillerson warning the president not to abandon those he had taken to calling "the last bastion of civilization in the Middle East." Given the objections of Mattis and Tillerson, it was only natural that the president decided to pull our troops out. AD AD Along with declining to enforce sanctions against Russia that Congress had approved, the administration's withdrawal from Syria is one of the most important foreign policy shifts in recent memory. Prior to the invasion of Iraq, U.S. foreign policy had been grounded in the idea of a clear, comprehensive, and perpetual military build-up designed to prevent threats from abroad. The Bush administration adopted this policy in 2001 after 9/11, cementing it into place in the wake of the 2003 invasion of Iraq. Over the next decade, the United States committed hundreds of billions of dollars

"We are not India, we are not Pakistan": Ram Madhav made the statement on the Pulwama attack Union minister, BJP chief, Ram Madhav, on Saturday gave a statement in support of Article 370, saying that no man can change their identity in ten days. "I don't agree with your interpretation. We are not Pakistan. We are not Pakistan. We are not India. We are a unique country, it is not our fault that we are projected that way. Let me tell you the reason, because you seem to have a problem with it. We have to protect the Hindu community. We have to protect the interests of the Muslims. Do you know, I have never sent a letter to anyone or have a conversation with anyone, since the BJP came to power at the Centre. I have never asked my voters who are in Jammu-Kashmir, or the region around where I was born, whether they are Hindus or Muslims. "No one has ever asked me that question. I am happy. I am the same man. I haven't changed my behaviour. I have never sent an email. I have gone out of my way to go into villages and talk to the people. I don't know what you have done. If you didn't do anything else when you were in the Congress, you did do something very important when you started talking to the people. This is where you make mistakes," the Union minister said. "I have never asked for the reason that Kashmir is part of India and not Pakistan. There is so much literature written on this. I have spent my life on a cause, but I haven't wasted my life. What would we have achieved if we have not done it? Look, what is important for me is the beautiful people of India, the diverse people of India, the wonderful, the idea of India, this country that has given so much to the world, this country where we were thrown out of for 50 years, but we came back, we fought our way back into it. "I take pride in that. I take pride in that. But I take pride in a country which is a place of harmony. The fact that we got divided into two countries is what has happened, is what we are seeing today. I don't think anyone is going to change his/her identity in
