Determination of specific leaf area and leaf traits of seven Alnus species by using the 3D-printed laser-based microscopic method. Determination of the specific leaf area (SLA) and leaf traits in Alnus spp. is important for some disciplines, but the current determination methods are complicated. In this study, the specific leaf area (SLA) of seven Alnus species was determined by using a 3D-printed laser-based microscopic method. The establishment of a 3D-printed topographical surface for calibration and the calculation of the leaf area were verified by using the topographical surface of three leaves. The SLA of seven Alnus species was found to range from 0.85 to 2.51 cm²/g with a mean of 1.50 cm²/g. The seven Alnus species had multiple traits, such as leaf length, width, surface roughness, leaf thickness, leaf stomatal number, and light transmission percentage. This study showed that the use of this laser-based microscopic method could have great potential for the SLA and leaf traits of deciduous Alnus species. PORTLAND, Ore. (KOIN) — A bull that has been patrolling the Portland streets for more than a year will finally get the help he needs. The Animal Recovery League is offering Dixie, a 3-year-old bull cross, a new home and care. "After over a year in our care, Dixie is losing his desire to find a new forever home," said Christina Burgh, wildlife field specialist at the ARL. "Dixie has been an incredible ambassador for our rescue, he has brought awareness to this problem and has taught the public what animals like him need." Dixie was born in September 2014 and is a gentle giant. There have been more than a dozen vets have come to the ARL hoping to find the right home for him. "He has been coming to our lobby and just looking for a place to live out his days," Burgh said. "He's a big kid and love having a lot of toys to play with." Dixie's weight is in the range of 1,200 to 1,400
