More particularly, the present invention is related to an electromagnetic actuator for use in applications requiring high reliability, small size, and low cost. Electromagnetic actuators are known in the art. Such actuators include a ferro-magnetic core and coils wound around the core and a stationary yoke. Typically, the core is mounted within an interior portion of the yoke to form a gap therebetween that can be closed or opened by an energized coil. There are two basic configurations for such actuators. In one configuration, all or part of the coil is exposed to the interior or exterior of the yoke. This allows the coil to move along with the core. This is referred to as a "co-moving" configuration. In a second configuration, the coil is positioned to move independently of the core. This is referred to as a "separate" configuration. The present invention relates to an electromagnetic actuator and particularly to a high reliability, small size, and low cost electromagnetic actuator.
