Woman dies after delivery in store parking lot Fayetteville, Ark.—A mother died after delivering her baby in a parking lot. Fayetteville police say that two mothers, one 19 and the other 20, took their children and brought them to the store’s parking lot. It was right outside the store, so the employee told them they could go inside and it would be okay. The son used a restroom, and returned to see his mother on the ground in the lot. His 19-year-old friend called an ambulance and then 911. The boy said that he tried to take his mother to the car, but he was scared, and ran home with his baby instead. The paramedics arrived about 10 minutes later. During their arrival, the mother began to have seizures, and went into cardiorespiratory arrest. She was taken to University of Arkansas Hospital with the baby, and family members were notified. She later died of her injuries. Autopsy results are pending. She was a co-worker of Long-term historical series of outcomes at a large network-based neuro-oncology center. Patients with brain tumors often seek tertiary consultation at academic centers, but this is not always advisable. The risks of brain biopsy and resection may be prohibitive, and the value of novel experimental treatments that may not be available at these sites is unclear. We have identified outcomes of 3411 neuro-oncology patients from 10 previous biopsy-proven primary brain tumor types at our own network-based neuro-oncology center. Seventy percent of patients underwent biopsy alone. Among patients with glioma, the most common diagnoses were glioblastoma (26%), grade III oligodendroglioma (18%), grade II oligodendroglioma (13%), and grade I astrocytoma (12%). Most patients survived for 5 years (47.6%). Survival was significantly better for glioblastoma (median 10 years), grade III gliomas (median 7 years), grade I and II oligodendrogliomas (median 6 years), oligoastrocytomas (median 5 years), and meningioma (median 6 years). Surgical resection significantly extended survival in most glioma subtypes. Younger age and more aggressive pathology were associated with poorer outcome across all tumor types. This retrospective study provides an important benchmark for future neuro-oncology practice.

Prediction of vascular injury to the anterior spinal artery in vertebral arterial dissection: correlation with MRI imaging and DSA results. Osborne [Osborne G. S. Vertebral Artery Dissection. Boston, MA: Butterworths] advocated that lesions would be similar to the patterns shown by DSA (digital subtraction angiography). We found these to be inaccurate. Severe injury in the anterior spinal artery results in spinal cord ischaemia. We suggest that the shape of the lesion on the MRI scans is more important than 'lesion distribution' predicted by DSA. ~Nd³⁺~-doped TiO₂~ NCs inks as opal-type layers for solar cells.
