More particularly the invention relates to a low alloy, high strength nickel base alloy.

The steel industries have long been searching for a stable nickel base alloy with good high temperature properties and corrosion resistance which can also be used for fabricating a cast iron product. A few candidate alloys have been developed but, in general, have limited applications because they cannot be readily cast into shapes other than ingots. U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,246,066 and 3,255,093 discuss nickel base alloys designed for fabricating cast ingots which are then transformed into sheets or bars by means of conventional ingot die forming operations. The above alloys have limited applications because they are incapable of being readily formed by a continuous casting operation. Further, the alloys fail to have the strength and creep resistance required for the fabrication of tooling and other extruded products. U.S. Pat. Nos. 2,342,563 and 2,486,116 disclose alloys composed of about 55 to about 80% nickel, 21 to about 35% chromium, and 7 to about 27% molybdenum. These alloys are not provided with as high strength and wear resistance as is desired. U.S. Pat. No. 3,725,024 discloses a process for producing a low alloy cast nickel base alloy wherein the initial combination of elements is Ni: 40 to 46%, Cr: 27 to 33%, and Fe: less than 14%. The alloy composition results in a cast product with relatively low strength and poor creep resistance. A nickel base alloy which overcomes
