Stick War: Castle Defence Keygen For (LifeTime)

Stick War: Castle Defence is an intergral rpg styled combat and strategic game. You control a brave Knight that can equip up to 3 Runes and use them in conjunction with their abilities to progress. After the launch of a Castle, the enemy will begin sending out waves of Stickmen. You and your opponents are in control of this battle for the fate of your Castle. Each wave of Stickmen begins with a Unique Skill that will attack your existing Castle. These skill's will add to your tower's energy. In turn, they will begin to attack your tower's defences. If they are successful, the tower will fall and you will lose a life. If you and your opponent's Towers fall, then you will be out of the game! Your job is to manage your tower's defences, adding upgrades to build up your strength. These upgrades can include Defensive Towers, Barracks, Communication Towers, and even additional health. Collect Runes as you progress, and equip them in your build in order to gain access to Unique Abilities. These runes unlock as you collect enough Powers and Experience. Other than killing the Stickmen, you can also push them into the ocean to redirect their efforts back at you. The enemies are all controlled by the game, so killing them will send their soul's into the game, and keep them attacking you, until you dispose of their stick body. This post has been edited by DDRDK - November 16, 2015, 02:17 PM Medieval Kingdom Defense This post has been edited by DDRDK - November 17, 2015, 11:20 AM A new class of play in true medieval times has opened here. Heroes of the Kingdom are the defenders of the realm, attempting to protect their lands from the hostile forces of the enemy. By upgrading their skills, they can gain a higher defence, which will significantly increase the time they can successfully defend their lands. Each hero can recruit up to 4 companions to aid them in their quest. After they have been revived they can both aid the player to help protect their land or they can be attacked by the invaders. The wave pattern can be changed by choosing from one of 5 types of enemies. This can be altered at any time in the game. These can vary in size, speed, defences and weapons. All the joys of a traditional RPG meets the rush and excitement of fighting thousands of enemy stickmen to save a kingdom. A nice idea, but too damn linear and boring. I played this last year on the XBLA and only just now finished it. First thing that caught my eye was that your hero could only have 4 companions at a time. Never had that limit in any of the other indie games I played, so I didn't think too much of it. I liked the first tower and castle modes, but the pace is too slow. They just keep coming and coming, so they pretty much have an unfair advantage with all the abilities they have. And then they have those shields they get. Even if you select, place and manage their troops, build bases, and fight other players as heroes in a variety of different campaigns. The various kinds of heroes include, archers, cavalry, infantry, mages, military factions, naval forces, healers, nukes, and heroes. Stick War: Castle Defender has predefined tactics and mechanics that follow lines of play. Each turn is generally constructed of two phases: movement and combat. This is influenced by both a players' hero pool and command points they have. There are three basic commands: Move, Attack, and Heal. Players can also use spells and abilities from their command pool that affect their troops such as healing, mana regeneration, mana recharge and damage boost. Players can also use spirit in combat to heal, which creates further limitations to both mana regeneration and mana recharge (possible further with magical/bomb/etc abilities). Tactics are also used to amplify the effects and inherent differences between single and multiplayer games.

Troop management The player uses a strategic map and an in-game browser to choose their squad. They choose heroes and villagers to upgrade; this can also be automated. They use the strategic map and town planner to place their army's base, and gather resources to continue upgrading their troops (or to continue upgrading said troop). Players can place their base anywhere on the map, and placing it creates their base. Each base has at least one type of resource it produces or uses, and being in a town or on a road allows for quicker access to resources. A
