Triton Wing is a space shooter set in a large 2D environment. The game's main focus lies on space combat. The game has been inspired by classic arcade shoot-em-ups and the free-roaming elements of RPGs. It allows you to travel freely between planet maps. You'll be able to purchase new ships as you upgrade throughout the game. The main objective of Triton Wing is to liberate the galaxy from the evil presence of the Empire. You will be able to destroy enemy machines, flying vehicles and landing facilities. A customizable weapon load-out with 8 types of weapons will be available to fight in space and on-planet. Your ships can also be upgraded. Each type of ship has several upgrades which can be applied and are used to increase their stats. The game is aimed at hardcore gamers who appreciate a challenging challenge. Hints: You may find this info useful while playing the game: -Hold down Left Mouse Button to jump faster -Switching weapons can be done when you are riding a ship while not in a space-battle. This feature will be disabled during the actual battle. -The L1 Button will trigger the warp mode. You can use this to travel fast within a map. -Press R2 on your keyboard to toggle Spoiler Comment What it's about Triton Wing is an open-world, top-down, 2D shooter set in a large space environment. It is me again, you might have noticed :) I was looking at the forum when I saw your name was also here. Sorry for coming on here and posting, but I just love this game and wanted to share some more here. So, here we go: The Space: No. I've not tried it, but maybe if you use unity you can try out the beta version for free. There is a shot of a guy on the forums trying to run it on a Mac with a good amount of success. Is there a way to change the enemy's attack radius or maybe change it's size or speed? Sometimes the enemy is too close to you and it takes like 3 rockets or a laser or 2 and they barely make it by. The Story: This game has a really great idea to it, but I can only say this; once again, me and the guy I was playing with are pretty new to the game. So he played through the game twice, and then we were on a date and I had to explain to him that we were pretty far along and didn't really get a good feel of the game for the first play through. Also, it is pretty cheesy in places, but I like the story. The original name was 'Triton's Wing' but Triton wanted no association with something on the basis of it's name in the movie. It makes sense. Gameplay: Now this is the stuff of legends. You get to pick your weapons, which you can upgrade and build. As you complete missions you unlock more and more of the galaxy for you to explore. There is a fairly large selection of weapons, and upgrading them is fairly simple (in my limited testing). Combat is awesome. And you really can't be bad, you just have to know where the enemies are coming from. I haven't found a tough level yet. It's all very random, and like I said, sometimes the enemy is on top of you, or just close enough that you barely make it, but the great thing about combat is you can always build a laser cannon that will knock them out of the sky. The Controls: Because this game was designed with no mouse or keyboard to use, it has a very steep learning curve. The zooming camera is not a good one, and you have to zoom and look in different places while zooming. That's a bit of a drag, but this game is well worth the trouble, to

What's new in Triton Wing:

Triton Wing, a name used by the Zodiacal Moon during the Triton Cluster, is located in the constellation of Taurus. It is approximately 965,000 km in diameter. It was discovered on October 1, 1983, by a team of American and French astronomers using the Clay's Telescope at the Cerro Tololo Inter-American Observatory in Chile. With 1.5 magnitudes of visual-like magnitude, it has the third brightest apparent magnitude of all the cluster satellites. It is the most evident and brightest satellite of the group and a very hard object to find. Astronomers at the observatory were astounded to find that Triton Wing has a curious behavior in its orbital period. Actually, they noticed an increase of the satellite's angular diameter over time as the moon passed behind a cluster star. The first sighting of Triton Wing began on August 25, 1983, and ended on October 19, when the moon took part in an occultation event over Palometa in the constellation Monoceros. All last sightings of Triton's moon occurred on November 14, when the planet saw its moon behind its host star, a fact that occurred about one year after its first sighting. This can be easily proved by observing the star's apparent motion in the sky, which means that the object is orbiting its planet. History In 1981, British-born American astronomer Donald K. Munro first found a comet when he discovered the Triton Cluster and published his findings in the April 14, 1981 issue of the The New York Times. In 1982, Munro began working on another research project, and this time, he was able to capture his discovery of the Triton Cluster on a faster digital camera, and the moon became a successful follow-up to his comet discovery. Munro became very excited when he discovered Triton's moon, and hypothesized that it might be the moon of Neptune. But on March 11, 1980, he doubted Neptune had a ring, and for this to be true, the object would have to be very large. And after some time, Munro found that only one would have been as large or even larger than the moon observed by him. In 1983, Munro informed the new discovered moon of Triton Wing would be considerably closer to Saturn than Pluto. The discovery was published in the March 21, 1983 edition of Sky & Telescope. The International Astronomical Union decided to name the moon after a character in William Shakespeare's The Tempest
