Wild Unknown contains two maps. The first map is a beautiful, open-world wilderness, where the player wakes up to a strange, surreal world populated with dangerous creatures and otherworldly objects. The second map is a vast, industrial plant, where the player must find the way to progress through the underground maze of pipes. Gameplay: Wild Unknown gameplay consists of three main branches: Puzzle solving, Hidden object searching, and Going down into the sewers.

Puzzle Solving: Players are given the goal of using the environment to their advantage to solve puzzles and uncover hidden objects. Some puzzles will require the use of gear to find hidden secrets, while others may require the use of objects, like tools, which can be gained or collected from various locations. There are several types of puzzles in the game. Environmental puzzles can be solved using logic and observation. These puzzles can be found throughout the world, and include, for example, making a parachute to escape the limited space between two trees and landing safely.

Hidden Object searching: Hidden object searching is a classic activity that was brought back to life in Wild Unknown. Players must spend time looking for hidden objects in the environment, such as keys, paintings, military documents, files, and artifacts. Objects can be found scattered around the map, in secret areas, or alongside other objects. The benefit of using search objects is that not all objects you come across are hidden: you may be searching for a key, but stumble upon a whiteboard with paint stains on it! There are three types of object searching in the game.

Static Objects: These objects are just lying around, waiting to be found.

Moving Objects: Objects that are on top of something else.

Player Objects: Objects that the player can move themselves, like a rope, a door, or a lever.

Bonus Objects: Objects that the player must search for to complete a puzzle that are not required for solving said puzzle.

Going Down into the Sewers: Another common activity in Wild Unknown is Down Into The Sewers. Players must proceed through a series of pipes to reach the end of the level. The pipes are full of danger, as they may be blocked by deadly lizards, or filled with dark and murky water. It is important to pay attention to the environment, but remember that there are always other ways to progress through the level. There is at least one alternate way to proceed through the level; use your research to discover its secret. Down into the Sewers is a classic game mechanic

If someone says “access to infrastructure” to you, what will be your first image? The image in your head will likely be IBM’s famous “blob” advertisement. A couple years ago, in an IBM Power 7-series server, they ran a clever and hilarious ad campaign that they licensed to other companies like Kemper Insurance and USAA. The campaign... Humans are notoriously bad at predicting when something will go wrong. In fact, you'd be hard-pressed to find a time when some callous human didn't erroneously predict that the next big catastrophe wouldn't happen for many decades. But this tendency to forget big events and processes in our lives serves us pretty well; it means we can easily... When I look at the charts below, I think of one big vivid image — an orphanage with little kids in it, covered in soot from a fire that happened a few days before. That image may be picture in your head. As for me, it's from a place in Cambodia called an orphanage called Lam Chuong, which means "abandoned...
