Various forms of furniture, such as, tables, beds, beds, and the like, are well known. For example, it is known to provide tables which include a table top with a decorative cover which typically includes legs and feet. These legs are formed in a variety of shapes or forms. For example, feet may be flat in shape or legs may include a cylindrical configuration. In some instances, in addition to a cover, the table may include a table top. For example, the table top may be hingedly connected to the legs and feet thereby being foldable or collapsible. Further, in some table constructions, the table top is configured to be shiftable with respect to the legs and feet from a position above the legs and feet to a position below the legs and feet. For example, the legs and feet can be configured to be moveable from positions generally perpendicular to the table top to positions inclined with respect to the table top. Further, in some tables the legs and feet are configured to permit the table to be erected to a position generally perpendicular to the table top. Additionally, it is known to form such tables from a wood, aluminum or other material having a minimum thickness. In this regard, in addition to tables constructed from metal or other materials, it is known to construct or form furniture, such as tables, in a plywood configuration. For example, it is known to form a plywood table bottom. However, it is also known to form a plywood table top in various configurations. For example, it is known to use a plywood bottom and/or sides for a table and form a plywood top. In this regard, such a top can be formed of a single plywood sheet or, for example, in multiple plywood sheets. Moreover, the table top is also configured to be foldable with respect to the legs and feet. In this regard, the table top is configured to be shiftable between a folded position and a generally erect position. While such tables and other related furniture are known, nonetheless it is believed that such furniture suffers from one or more problems. In this regard, because such furniure is generally constructed from a wood or other material, it may be relatively heavy. Thus, some individuals find such furniture difficult to carry or to move. This is particularly true when the furniture is to be moved through a door or across a room. In addition, because the furniture is constructed from a wood or other material, the wood or other material may split or

What is the solution to the sustainable development challenge of the future? More and more environmental organizations, businesses, and governmental organizations are voicing the urgent need for a clear and long-term approach to this problem. In “Sustainability: A New Science, A Human Purpose,”, Rupert Costo frames the challenge as “a matter of solving systems-level problems, a process of design of ‘whole systems’ to see how these systems support or not our well being.” They are right. We need a long-term approach. In this new book, Costo provides a roadmap for this approach, as well as a clear rationale for such an approach. He states that “the nature of the future problem needs to be understood first. For design to succeed, it is not enough to understand the problem — the problem must be understood well enough to constructively frame the design.” He explains that “systems thinking and design thinking” will help to generate solutions to this challenge. Additionally, he explains that we need to embrace the web of life – the future world – to approach solutions. In this edition of “Color Confidential,” we explore the future world of systems thinking and design thinking and the benefits to solving environmental problems. Who's listening? The first step is asking who is listening. For many individuals, the problem is so large that they may never confront it directly. Most environmentalists look at the environmental crisis and ask “who has time?” and sadly, everyone has time. Solving the problem is one that needs to be faced. How is design thinking being used to solve this problem? Design thinking, as Costo mentions, is not new. One could argue that it has been around for several decades. However, people are using it in new ways to create solutions. Manufacturers like Toyota are becoming designers, asking the question: How can we build a car that is more fuel efficient? As they seek to reduce the carbon footprint of the car, they work to build cars that are more efficient and that also create jobs. How? By designing a car that is flexible in its body structure and that creates the required jobs – in this case, the production of the car. The same thing has been seen in the design of the microchip, the internet, and more. In another instance, a local entrepreneur designs a sustainable airplane that
