The formula for quantum efficiency was determined to be $QE = (QE^*)QE = (QW)/N$, where QE is the optical quality of the detector, QW is the quantum efficiency of the detector (the solid angle measured in steradians). [3] QE was a measure of the amount of light that reach the pixel (in photons). The value of QE differed in different wavelengths, and could be as high as 100% at shorter wavelengths (visible light, 0.4-0.7 microns, 0.7-0.6 microns, 0.6-0.3 microns), in the mid-IR (2-3 microns), and in the thermal infrared where it may be as low as 5%. The flowers have been found in Egyptian tombs and buried with the pharaohs in ancient Egypt. During the Victorian period the primrose was used by millers to dye their flour a pale colour which would attract the eye of the consumer. Due to economic conditions during the First World War, the primrose was used as a symbol of the British Empire. When the war ended, the primrose continued to be used and was associated with peace in a variety of different ways. The definition of the primrose was expanded to include any hyacinth, including both the true hyacinth and the range of yellow flowering shrubs. During the second world war the primrose was used as a symbol of peace. In June 1940, the Children's Flower Clubs (est. 1931) began to make primrose arrangements to be sent to children all over the world. They were packaged in a pink paper box marked with the letters 'PEACE' to show the symbolic meaning of the primrose. In 1944, these arrangements were taken up by the American Red Cross which was to give the symbol and name a new meaning in the second world war. In 1944 and 1945 the committee asked its members to include a primrose in any wreaths and arrangements they sent to military families on the home front. In December 1945, while these arrangements were being sent to the children in the children's flower clubs, they were taken up by the Peace Movement of the United Nations, both in America and the UK. These arrangements were bought to the UN headquarters in New York by the American Girl Guides. To the children at home, the primrose was a symbol of home and family. For the American Girl Guides, the primrose also represented peace and friendship among nations. The Children's Flower Clubs became the American Junior Red Cross and continued to make arrangements made of primroses. These arrangements were packed in plain cardboard boxes
