cysts in children. Posterior fossa cysts are rare in children. In cases of symptomatic posterior fossa cysts, the prognosis is often poor. Partial or complete ventriculostomy was used in the treatment of leptomeningeal cysts in 13 children. Thirteen children aged 7 to 17 years (mean, 13.5 years) with leptomeningeal cysts in the posterior fossa and communicating with the spinal subarachnoid space were treated by partial or complete ventriculostomy. The ventriculostomy was performed under stereotactic control by either frontal or occipital interhemispheric approach. The cyst contents were initially removed in five cases and the wound was left open in the remainder. Postoperatively, all 13 patients were evaluated and a follow-up of 10 to 30 months (mean, 17.5 months) was achieved. The results were excellent in one case and good in the others, with a 95% cure rate (12 of 13 patients). Two patients who were operated at an earlier age benefited from a second ventriculostomy 4 months after the first operation. The ventriculostomy is a safe and effective surgical technique for the treatment of symptomatic posterior fossa cysts. A single operation may be sufficient to control the symptoms. This technique could be used in cases with complex cyst anatomy, but the child must be under close observation for possible complications of ventricular overdrainage.
