More than 30 Km of forgotten ruins in Mangum The ruins at Mangum are more than 30 kilometres from the town of Mangum, but still the road is still well kept. The church was built in 1871. There is also an old water tower from the forties but all other buildings are empty. This building also has a long history. It once had a bank and store. There were many trees around and the road seems to mee the same from the fifties and maybe even the sixties. The church is still there but it is probably hard to find someone who has a key. If you are passing and looking around you will probably see something that makes you want to explore. Electrodiagnostic testing for peripheral neuropathy. Electrodiagnostic testing is essential in the diagnostic workup of patients with peripheral neuropathy. The differential diagnosis of a patient presenting with neuropathic symptoms requires a thoughtful evaluation of the neurologic examination, along with the electrodiagnostic findings. This review focuses on the utility of electrodiagnostic testing in the evaluation of upper limb and lower extremity peripheral neuropathies. In many situations, routine electrodiagnostic testing offers useful information, such as in the workup of patients with suspected primary axonal neuropathies and mild sensory nerve impairment, whereas electrodiagnostic testing is less useful in the evaluation of motor-dominant neuropathy and in the evaluation of patients in whom a peripheral nerve lesion is suspected secondary to a metabolic or systemic disease. Hyaluronan improves the rheological properties and texture of semolina-based pasta products. This study examined the effects of modifying the rheological properties of five semolina-based pasta products by adding 0.5% (w/w) of sodium hyaluronate on noodle hardness, weight variation, cooking loss, cooking time, cooking yield, the sensory characteristics of the product, and the ability of the
