Q: Mysql Link - cannot get name of table to set I'm setting up a simple data migration for a new database and it's going horribly wrong. I'm getting this error when trying to log into MySQL and run the "SHOW CREATE TABLE" command to see what tables exist. Warning: mysqli_connect(): (HY000/2005): Unknown MySQL server host 'none'; This is what I'm doing: public function __construct() { $mysqli = new mysqli('localhost','root','root','dbtest'); if (mysqli_connect_errno()) { printf("Connect failed: %s ", mysqli_connect_error()); die(); } } Where am I going wrong? The table DOES exist in the other server that I'm trying to link to! A: You have 2 databases (master and dev) and 2 different servers (one is not running). Keep mysqli_close() in the if block. I Am For You Might take some time to get going but it promises to be an amazing introspective & nostalgic album, with a variety of sounds ranging from electronica to ambient with a side of happy songs. Anyone who likes the music from Grizzly Bear, Explosions in the Sky, Ought, Pretty Lights, etc should enjoy this. I do not think I have heard a collection of songs with a more noirish feel. Very mysterious and experimental. cscool I saw this band during Spring Awakening 2013, at Oberhausen, Germany. It was a great moment, I enjoyed their music and they were a great and friendly band. I would also recommend the band to anyone looking for interesting electronic music. Thanks they made my day!The Hedgehog signaling pathway: advances in therapy. Multiple studies demonstrate that aberrant Hh signaling is associated with a variety of GI pathologies. Activation of the canonical Hh pathway results in the stabilization of Gli protein, which activates transcription of the target genes Ptch and Smo. The ability of this pathway to act as an oncogene is highlighted

From a survey of Australian health care workers: attitudes to nursing work and home caring. This paper reports results of a survey to examine attitudes of health care workers towards their work and home caring. The survey was undertaken at a tertiary teaching hospital in a Mid-Western State. Of the 50 respondents, most (nearly 80%) stated that nursing was the most fulfilling career. Home care was perceived as most satisfying because of a combination of 'vigor' and 'peacefulness', whereas hospital work was most difficult because of the intensity of the environment and adverse working conditions. Some respondents admitted to being responsible for deaths and some experienced an inability to cope. Nurses, particularly in acute care, need to understand that their patients are not 'sick' patients, but, rather, complex, emotionally disturbed patients who require a psychosocial as well as a technical approach to their care. On Monday, Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey told reporters that Cambridge Analytica, the data mining firm whose unsecured files were stolen during the 2016 presidential campaign, is "not working right now." As BuzzFeed News points out, in a statement, Cambridge Analytica's chief executive Alexander Nix was seen telling a Channel 4 News reporter, "I know that our data is safe," despite the leak. "We have seen no data breach. We are working with Cambridge Analytica [and] our data is safe and secure." Earlier on Monday, Karim Emami, the director of Cambridge Analytica's parent company SCL Group, insisted that the organization is "not in any difficulty at all" as a result of the controversy. "Cambridge Analytica is not in any difficulty at all," Emami told the Guardian. "I am sorry it has become a storm in a teacup." But according to the company's former chief operating officer, Christopher Wylie, the firm does not have any functional contracts remaining with the Trump campaign, though it is continuing to work on the midterm elections.
