Weary of waiting for Apple to fix its iCloud Photo Library, iOS developer Marco Arment created a workaround that allows users to sync their entire photo library across multiple devices, even if they aren't using iCloud. "I've worked out how to sync the Photos library across multiple devices without using iCloud," he writes in a blog post. Instead of using Apple's cloud-based service, Marco writes, you can download the photos from the iOS devices you have and upload them to a third-party server. "The server then takes care of storing these photos, locking them down to be on a certain device (or devices), and keeping each photo in its own folder on the server. You don't have to worry about using iCloud at all, and it's the simplest way that I can think of to sync photos across multiple devices." Even though Apple has stated that photos stored in its servers aren't tamper-proof, Marco writes that anyone who doesn't trust Apple's servers can install the app, which syncs Photo Stream, on a third-party server. "If you have a server in the cloud that isn't controlled by Apple, you can install my iCloud PhotoSync server here to give you the same functionality as iCloud Photo Library." The downside, as Marco says, is that the entire gallery has to be installed, which can be a lot of photos. On the plus side, you don't have to worry about backups, and it'll even work over cellular connections so you won't have to worry about Wi-Fi when you're abroad. On a related note, iCloud Photo Library has been a contentious issue for many users, particularly those who don't feel that their precious, time-sensitive photos should be uploaded to Apple's servers at all. If you want to try this out yourself, Marco has posted instructions on his blog. See also: Auscultation Auscultation or auscultation means hearing. . For example, when you are writing a method to generate points in a Euclidean space (which is the simplest setting), it will not be able to handle points on the sphere surface and inside. When the input space is known to be Euclidean, you can adjust the code to accept points on the sphere. For example, if you know that a point is on the sphere, then you can change the equation to $\|u-v\|=r$. In this setting, the distance between two points is Euclidean. Over the past year, I've been involved in a completely different sort of community, one that has so much more variety in its memberships and interests. I'm talking, of course, about the kids. In this community, there is a search function on any given adult forum or wiki, and if you need to find out anything about kids, that's it. The kids are in charge. While there are no official "exams" or "papers" in the kids' community, the kids run most of the sites, schools and conventions, and they have their own customs. I've had the good fortune of becoming part of that community, and it's been a fantastic experience. I've even been able to make some friends outside of it as a result, which is one of the greatest things that came out of my current job. But it was a change from the community of adults that I've been in, and eventually, I was going to have to find a new one. At that point, the rest of the adult RPG community was the obvious choice. My first move was to the younger systems: Shadowrun, Advanced CyberPunk and HackMaster. However, I quickly realized that many of my personal friends were there as well, and it's not uncommon to be stuck in a conversation of either side of the generation gap. I also figured that the same problem would eventually arise with the Shadowrun system itself, simply because I hadn't ever played the game as a kid. Thus, I decided to look elsewhere. Naturally, I went back to D&D. Since I was a kid, I've always had an interest in what worked well for me when I was younger, and I decided that I was going to take a fresh look at the system. I still play the game
