Firefighters put out several fires Thursday night in St. Paul's Seward neighborhood as they worked to extinguish a structure fire that broke out on two vacant homes. The first fire was reported at 7:29 p.m. at 721 S. University Ave., and the second at 8:22 p.m. in the 6200 block of Dale Avenue, police said. All firefighters were able to contain the fires, which remained small, before 9 p.m., according to the St. Paul Fire Department. The investigation into the cause of the fires is ongoing. Fire departments from Minneapolis, St. Paul, Maplewood and Roseville responded to the scene. Congenital idiopathic dilatation of the cisterna magna: a case report. Idiopathic dilatation of the cisterna magna is an uncommon finding in children. We report a case of a 10-year-old boy with cervical headache and fourth ventricle obstruction due to congenital idiopathic dilatation of the cisterna magna. Computed tomography of the brain showed a widening of the subarachnoid space in the cisterna magna and in the retrocerebellar and suboccipital regions. Magnetic resonance imaging demonstrated a herniation of cerebellum through the foramen magnum into the cervical spinal canal. The patient was managed conservatively with good clinical recovery. The Toda paradox It has been an exciting weekend in financial markets. After last week's "financial hangover" and yesterday's "institutional rebound", I thought it might be worth having another go at the Toda paradox — thought it is unlikely that the cure for a hangover is a hangover. It starts with a refresher on the principle, which was first proposed by Jeremy Siegel, about the "average investor" and it's complementary principle - "the market participant". "In practice, people do not act as if they are market participants," Siegel wrote. "If they did, stock prices would be strongly influenced by their desires rather than by price-setting information." Essentially, he argued that stock prices don't reflect the net value of an asset, they reflect what an "average" investor believes the value of the asset to be
