“We are so excited to showcase HyperMotion Technology,” said FIFPro CEO Ruben Falcão. “It brings some of the most important attributes of playing a real football match to the digital pitch. It also reinforces the value of the generation of real-life data for the future of our sport. Our player data will provide a truly authentic football experience and exceed the expectations of the players and the fans.” Activision revealed last year that the game would use motion capture to capture players in physical motion, accurately reproduce dynamic physical play, ensure as complete a game as possible and deliver an authentic player experience through its use of real-life motion capture data from players to create the HyperMotion Technology. “When we started on the initial design stages for FIFA 22 we approached motion capture from the start and made sure we would use the technology to its full potential,” said Matt Bromley, senior producer, FIFA 22. “We are so proud of how this technology has been developed and we are excited to share this quality of gameplay with fans around the world.” The match was played between 2014 FIFA World Cup winners Brazil and German team Germany on July 28 at the Sao Paulo Stadium in Brazil. FIFA created the FIFPro Tournament in partnership with FIFPro and the International Football Association Board (IFAB), a worldwide representative body of the men's and women's game. Captured in-game footage will be used to showcase the technology in-studio and in-game, with other gameplay footage from the match also available to be seen on the FIFA YouTube page. “This technology not only shows what a great technical achievement this is, but has brought some of the authenticity of the real game to life for the first time in the history of the FIFA game. Thanks to the tireless effort of our own experts, and other leading football bodies such as FIFPro and IFAB, the game is as accurate as it possibly could be,” said FIFA President Gianni Infantino. “This is a watershed moment in the history of the FIFA game and video games in general, as we see the world's most popular football simulation games tracking real-world player performance in the context of real-life football match-play.” The FIFPro Tournament will also feature live stream of the virtual Fifa Ultimate Team Draft with 24 of the world's best players

FIFA 22 EA SPORTS FIFA 20 Xbox One Review Review Somewhere between Mario Kart and the NFL, EA Sports' FIFA franchise has captivated millions for the last two decades. But on the home console front, the series has only been on Xbox since FUT 18 was released last year, and last year's iteration was an underwhelming port of FIFA 17 that wasn't even exclusive to Xbox. Now, with FIFA 22 EA SPORTS FIFA 20 Xbox One Review, which is on sale right now, that changes. The new Xbox One port of FIFA 22 is a beast. It has new features, a new career mode, new kits, new commentators, all-new visuals, much-improved gameplay and more than the majority of your friends have ever felt that need to say about a game in the past year. In and of itself, FIFA 22 Xbox One Review is a massive leap forward for the series.
