Warhammer 40,000: Dawn of War 3 is a real-time strategy game that brings a high level of tactical action to the fans of the Warhammer 40,000 universe. The game runs on PC and Xbox One. This game is published by THQ Nordic GmbH.

_____ Q: Naming a Queue (Queue.Queue) in Python I have a Python class which I want to give the property that it owns a Queue, hence I have the following (simplified) version: `class MyClass(object): def __init__(self): self.queue = Queue.Queue() def doSomeWork(self): ... while not self.queue.empty(): item = self.queue.get(0) ... return` The problem is that I'm not really happy with the name "self.queue". It's rather not self-explanatory (for others, it's meant to describe the queue -- a queue associated to this object). I know that there is a built-in `Queue.Queue()` function, but as I have to create this queue myself for each instance of my class, I'd rather not use it. So I'm wondering, is there a nicer name for that queue than "self.queue"? And if not, do you have any suggestions for an alternative naming strategy for the queue? A: `class MyClass(object): def __init__(self): self.queue = Queue() def doSomeWork(self): while not self.queue.empty(): item = self.queue.get(0) ... return` You could name it something like this: `class MyClass(object): def`

__init__(self): self.queue = Queue()

We are eager to see how many gamers will have a once-in-a-lifetime experience in one of the world’s most ambitious fantasy RPG titles.

With respect to publishing the game in Asia, the Elden Ring product line consists of titles, launched under separate administration with each one expected to have an Asian release.

Establishing a smooth global launch model for titles including the anime-style Elden Ring is our ultimate goal. As we approach the final stages of developing each title in terms of quality and competitiveness, we are collecting product information on the launch plans for each.

Currently, the game’s 2017 publication timeframe is approximately Autumn to Winter (September - December). We will announce details on its release locations as they become known.

A fan from each region will be the one to bring the game out there for you. We would like to say thank you as always.
