NEW YORK (CBSNewYork/AP) — A U.S. appeals court is reviewing a higher court's ruling that overturned an international arms treaty against landmines. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit heard oral arguments Tuesday at the appellate courthouse in New York City over the overturning of the U.S. ban on landmines in 1989, which was a product of the Treaty Banning Anti-Personnel Mines, Landmines and Barges. Arguments were presented to a three-judge panel by both sides. The appeal is of a U.S. 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals panel ruling last week overturning a lower court's decision on May 12. The U.S. had reached an agreement with about a dozen nations that was signed in Dublin, Ireland in 1986 but the pact was not ratified by the U.S. Senate. It had been challenged in lower courts by the National Rifle Association and groups advocating for veterans. "This is a really important treaty," Mark Byers, an attorney for the National Rifle Association, told the court Tuesday. "It's a treaty banning the development and use of a device, a terrible device, which kills, maims and incapacitates for the rest of a person's life," he added. The case centers on a complaint brought by the NRA in 2011 and challenged a ban on the export of the U.S. made M67 grenade, a non-consumable fragmentation hand grenade. U.S. District Judge Thomas McKeague ruled that the ban violates the law's treaty clause. He said it's an infringement on the U.S. foreign policy to stop it from exporting an essential component of its military. McKeague ruled in favor of the NRA and the other plaintiffs, who argued that the ban on exports violates the domestic and international commerce clause. His ruling was stayed by U.S. District Judge Colleen McMahon of New York, who ruled that the ban was within the treaty clause's exclusive domain of the Senate. The NRA claimed that although the M67 grenade was put through a rigorous review process in the United States before being allowed to be exported, there is no reason to believe the process would not work equally well for the device in other countries. McKeague's
