The indexed map is a map $f \colon S \rightarrow \prod_{i \in I} S$ defined by $f(x) = (f_i(x))_{i \in I}$. When f is an indexed map, the family of maps $\{f_i\}_{i \in I}$ is called the indexing family for f . Take a hint for this question: If S is totally ordered and f_i is order-preserving for all $i \in I$, is f order-preserving as well? [Hint: think about the connected components of the $f_i(x)$.] What's the intuition behind this type of indexed maps? A: For the hint, suppose that S is totally ordered, 0cc13bf012

soal lomba mapsi Q: What do you call someone who pays a lot of attention to their personal appearance? When I was growing up (in the United States), there was an acronym that I didn't fully understand that was used by teenage boys to refer to people who paid a lot of attention to their appearance. For instance, if you were wearing a navy blue sweater, then you were wearing a "Navy Blue Coat." If you were wearing white tennis shoes, you were wearing "White Shoes," and so on. Later, I was amazed to discover that "Navy Blue Coat," "White Shoes," etc. were simply variations on a much wider theme: "Sailor." The joke would be "Just look at you, you're wearing your sailor suit! Get out of here." A: There is a term for this type of thing: Sailor suits: A sailor suit is a kind of clothing worn in public by boys for one specific event, such as a competition or party. The idea that a type of clothing, such as a blue sweater, can become the name of a uniform seems like a legend or myth. I never heard about sailor suits until I went to Canada, and the tradition there goes back far enough that it was considered a modern tradition. In modern dress, it is not a term I have heard. A: If you're referring to the analogy about wearing a sailor's uniform on a sunny day, it's called a sailor's uniform. A: A formal term is naval uniform A naval uniform is clothing worn by a member of the Royal Navy, usually on ceremonial occasions. It is also worn in the Royal Navy,, and in Commonwealth navies. There are four main categories of naval uniform: mess dress, mess dress with medals and plumes, service dress and shore dress. A traditional naval uniform is the white mess dress, with black-topped epaulettes and a peaked cap for ceremonial occasions; the mess dress is a modified version, with shoulderboards instead
