Death Tie and be relieved that his early death saved a lot of innocent lives. Certainly saved a lot of his friends, that he had trained for 5 years. The "Nuke 'Em!" viral video is not an example of how to not build an IP. can be to make it appear realÂ . A: This example should demonstrate what you want, it uses Java's date formatting to use your preferred format, and prints the date in a readable format.

```java
import java.text.SimpleDateFormat;
import java.util.Date;
public class DateFormatter {
    public static void main(String[] args) {
        SimpleDateFormat sdf = new SimpleDateFormat("dd/MM/yyyy");
        String today = sdf.format(new Date());
        System.out.println(today);

Output 09/18/2012 As you can see, it's using your preferred date format, and prints the date in a more readable format. A: I have seen tools that print IP addresses and NAT ranges, but I do not think that it is something new for the tool to show things like that. Depending on the vendor, it might be difficult to get what you want. I did not look to see if that is the case. Another option is to use a published "call graph" file and parse that. If you have a version that is not too old or not too different from what you are using, you could write a small JVM agent that is run on each node and does this. In that case, the node can either be run with a command line argument to the tool that tells it what IP address range to look for, or (preferably) by calling the tool. Either method works. There is a "socket" mode in the agent that you can use. Unfortunately, it only supports UNIX sockets, so it is not available to Windows
