

The technology has been carefully used to emulate player actions throughout the match and capture the realistic movement of players and their impact on the ball. The artificial intelligence of the players on the pitch have been fine-tuned to recognise the ball and react to it in the same way that the real players would do. Players' movements can even be replicated with the direction of sprinting and acceleration, something that has never been possible before. This means that the AI will always react to attacks in the same way as the players would. HyperMotion Technology also allows FIFA to more accurately reproduce the flow and speed of football, as well as making it more realistic to see where the ball can and can't be controlled. For example, players can switch their control from foot to head, or use their whole body to achieve greater control of the ball. Furthermore, when players are tackling, tackling height has been changed to be more realistic, with both players having a more natural weight distribution. FIFA 22 also features the 'Unreal Engine 4', which has improved animation and visuals. The stadiums and grass on the pitch have all been improved to be more detailed and match the level of detail on the fields in the new FIFA 19 with the aim of providing the smoothest and most realistic game to date. Features FIFA 22 introduces the "HyperMotion Technology" to capture real player movement and learn from every match, perfecting the most realistic and fun-to-play experience on console for the past year. The game introduces 9 new playable leagues, 18 teams and 18 stadiums in total - including landmark stadiums such as the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, the Rose Bowl in Seattle, and the Maryland Stadium in Lexington, KY. Played by professional and amateur fans worldwide, the 18 leagues offer a breadth of styles, traits and local rivalries. You can enjoy playing in your favourite league, but also be challenged to face the tricky north American leagues. The new "Real Player Motion Model" brings more emotion and life to the players. Players sprinting, diving and dribbling have been made faster and therefore more realistic. Players tackling and the "true" distance of aerial duels have also been increased and now match real world data. Every day a new story is told in the new saga mode as you take over the reigns of club management. The
